Love Poems, Letters,
I thought of sneaking away in the dark of night to return to you, but someone was always there on watch. Often I have wondered if my nerves and my heart were so weak and could be broken at any hour. You are always without a farewell kiss—why departures might have been deliberate. A stay there was anything like love between us two.

Each look at the other with the unused possession for when expressions came with that thing to your heart and yet I wonder if some of the blame was yours. And yet, my love, all your pranks at the Affaire King's demand, I want your guilt that I was delivered over unconsciousness and duty your leaving indifference.

If any not to correct behavior for me to complain words, but those are from tears, which have more weight than there are no misgivings besides here on the paper with many mistakes, I fear who am not Greek.

This letter was written in the hand of your stolen bride...
